

Smart Short Skirt Suits for Autumn Wear

Two-toned Brown Tweed Suit for Autumn Country Wear.

Walking Costume of Green and Black Hopsacking.

Royal Blue Serge Gown, Stitching and Bands in Black.

THE announcement that the leading couturiers and purveyors of garments to fashionable women are this season paying special attention to the designing of attractive and practical modes in short skirted costumes, will soothe some of the minds of those to whom the trailing microbe collecting walking skirt has been a source of dissatisfaction.

The models shown in the accompanying illustration show the new tailored walking costumes which bear the names of the best Paris houses on their belts, and prove that a woman can appear really alluringly attractive even though her skirt is two inches from the ground.

The convenience of this costume need not be expatiated upon. The gowns which do not have a pocket in the front side scheme cunning little manish pockets in the jacket or tucked away on the waistcoat.

The rage for gay waistcoats, by the way, is not limited to the man's tailor. Women pride themselves upon finding effective and out-of-the-way pieces of cloth of which to make these fascinating little adjuncts to the tailor-made costume.

Brown with blue spots, green plaided in black hussar, red with a faint yellow line through it, and black with fleur-de-lis—these are some of the newest waistcoat cloths offered for selection this season. It will be observed that the sleeves of all these jackets show an extreme width at the cuff, and an abridged length if any at all, below the waist line.

The opportunity for a display of smart cravats, well-fitting collars and pretty blouses is endless with these suits.

The newest "hand hats" are made less hard than formerly, soft choux and quills.

ored point d'esprit net, sewn across each end. A tie of this kind looks very pretty worn with an open coat, and it can be made quite easily and inexpensively at home. Girls might well devote some of their spare moments also to the making of sailor collars, in white lawn or cambric, finely tucked and bordered with little frills of the same material, or in clear white muslin, ornamented with insertions and frills of lace. Romney Achus are also very pretty things. They should be made in fine white silk muslin or gauze, and edged with frills of the same muslin, fully gathered and bordered with a narrow hem. Point d'esprit net makes charming fichus arranged in a similar way, and as it can be washed any number of times, it is far more economical than silk muslin, although not quite so soft and becoming in effect. It is a good plan to edge the frills of the fichu with very narrow black velvet baby ribbon as this helps to give the frills a certain amount of consistency.

The introduction of hand embroidered butterflies in white on a fine hem-stitch lawn collar is new, and so is a diagonal stripe of Duchesse lace, which turns over the neckband, replaced for country wear by bands of stiffened lawn not so hard as the linen collar. Some of these fasten in front, the upper end finely embroidered in a square or diamond pattern. A favorite is a fine lawn stock and tie in one, the narrow turnover in front embroidered in white, a stud hole at the back keeping it firm on the shirt or blouse, while a couple of ends are passed round and fastened in front, and embroidered to match the collar piece. Narrow little ties in white washing silk or lawn can be tied either in a bow or sailor knot, and are to be had also in light blue.

Rest.
(Mary Woolsey Howland in the Commoner.)
(Lines found under the pillow of a soldier who died at Port Royal.)
I lay me down to sleep,
With little care
Whether my making find
Me here, or there.

A bowing, burdened head
That only asks to rest,
Unquestioning, upon
A loving breast.
My good right hand forgets
Its cunning now;
To march the weary march
Knows not how.

I am not eager, bold,
Nor strong—all that is past;
I am ready now to do,
At last, at last.
My half-day's work is done,
Though this is all my part,
I give a patient God
My patient heart.
And grasp His banner still,
Though all the world be dim—
These stripes as well as stars
Lead after Him.

Captain Philip.
Some testimony has been introduced at the Schley inquiry, and more is expected, to the effect that the maneuver of the Brooklyn at the battle of Santiago endangered the Texas.

Captain Philip of the Texas will be quoted, no doubt, in support of the contention of the department clique that the officer under whose personal command the Spanish fleet was destroyed was so incompetent or cowardly that he came very near sinking one of his own ships.

It is admitted that the log of the Texas shows nothing to indicate that it experienced any danger of this description, but it is already explained that Captain Philip either neglected or gave an order that no mention of the peril should be made.

Beautiful Eyes and How to Keep Them.

By Helen Troy.

The eyes are the mirrors of the soul, but even mirrors are not always beautiful nor well framed.

What woman can ever be called lovely who has thin, crooked, pale brows and scarcely any lashes to shade her eyes and lend shadows to their luster? The color, blue, gray, green or brown, nature alone has decided, but the frame, the shape, the beauty, lies only with the owner of the eyes.

Really beautiful eyes must have care and really beautiful hands or feet must have the same. "Dark shadows under the eyes" sound better than it looks, and the "almost indiscernible line of her brow" is pretty only in a book. To avoid the shadows and obtain a brilliant sparkle to the eye sleep enough and look well to your general health. To sleep too much is as bad as sleeping too little, for it gives the eyes a dull, drowsy look.

Reading at twilight or by a dim artificial light also produces dark circles under the eyes, and to avoid wearing glasses because you detect them will utterly ruin the most glorious eyes.

Eyes that are round may be made almost shaped by pulling outward the exterior corner of the lid. This requires patience and attention every day. To small eyes can be given a larger appearance by darkening the lids and drawing the line slightly toward the extreme exterior corner of the lid.

If the eyelashes are stubby and thin it is well to trim the ends once a month, slightly and very carefully, and to bathe them afterward with tepid water, in which you have put a few drops of rose-water. A little pure olive oil applied at night will stimulate the growth of the lashes. The eyes should be washed the last thing at night and the first thing in the morning. A little pinch of borax in the water will serve as an excellent wash, and not only clean the eye thoroughly, but serve to brighten it. The fingers, and never a cloth or sponge, should be used to wash the eyes. Wink the water into the eyes and always rub the lids toward the nose to strengthen the eyes after the fashion of the American Indians.

A corn flower water, made by steeping sixty-five grammes of the corn flowers, bruised in a mortar, in a quart of water for ten hours, then straining and distilling over a slow fire, is an excellent wash to use if the eyes are inflamed or the lids red. It will also strengthen the eyes and serve to make the lashes silky.

Eyebrows that are irregularly shaped or excessively heavy can be thinned and made shapely at once by the skillful use of tweezers. If they are thin and crooked, a lotion made by dissolving a grain of sulphate of quinine in two ounces of alcohol should be applied with a brush every night. As the brows thicken they should be brushed to the line desired, and if they are inclined to crop and grow even then, the tweezers should be used to remedy. Rubbing the brows with the fingers five minutes each night in a straight or arched line—according to a fancy—will help them to grow and straighten.

A distinct eyebrow is one of the chief beauties of any face. And no pale, undecided shade of yellow can form a "distinct" line. Therefore, very light brows, if they are to be of any use, must be darkened. There are many preparations put up that can be purchased at your druggist's. The best of these is Mascara. This, however, is only for the brows. It thickens as well as darkens.

A lotion that is harmless and effective to both brows and lashes is made by boiling an ounce of walnut bark in a pint of water. Boil about two hours and then add a very small piece of alum. This should be strained and put in a bottle, and small jars and tightly corked. Apply it to the brows with a sable brush and to the lashes with a tiny orange stick on which has been twisted a very small, thin piece of lint.

A person with impure blood rarely, if ever, has beautiful eyes. The daily diet also has a great effect on the beauty of the eyes. Too fat foods, too sweet and too much of them, and not enough of nutritious food, will mar their beauty. The former gives them a fat, greasy look and the latter a dull, faded appearance.

The eyes should never be exposed to strong lights nor should they be strained in the half darkness. Either is apt to produce an irritation. Somewhere is made a lotion for this irritation that is most excellent. It is made by steeping thirty grammes of rosemary flowers in one kilo-gramme of distilled water for one week. Afterward with a strainer pour the water. Water is added thirty grammes each of rosewater and brandy.

A Sharp Disclosure.
(Philadelphia Record.)
The advent at the White House of a president with an average family makes renewed and sharp disclosure of the fact that this great country has no domestic large enough for its chief magistrate. In the residence wing of the executive mansion there are but five sleeping apartments, while the Roosevelt family, with nurse, governess, maid and housekeeper, numbers twelve persons. Under such circumstances the housing of the president's family in decent quarters is a serious problem, a solution for which should be promptly found by the incoming congress next winter.
